Your spirit of generosity is extraordinary, and you have given us so much to be grateful for this year.

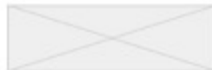

Here in Washington, D.C., your support has helped add to the many acres that are now protected. That means you can enjoy incredible places like Bear Island near Potomac Gorge and so many other of our unique natural wonders.

Because of you, nature can continue to share its bounty — today, and for generations to come.

On this day of gratitude, we are also reminded of all that's at stake as threats to nature intensify. There is so much work to be done to ensure the food we eat, the air we breathe, and the places we call home are safe. I hope you will consider giving a special gift today to help protect nature and all it gives us.

Creating a more sustainable path forward for our planet happens one small step at a time. Thank you so much for leading the way.

Happy Thanksgiving from The Nature Conservancy,

Tim Purinton

Executive Director, DC/Maryland Program
